

%

Ms Prue Howard
Sex Discrimination
Commissioner
133 Castlereagh St
Sydney
NSW 2000.

24 July 20

Dear Ms Howard

I have just finished Germain Greer
The Female Eunuch and Kris Sommers Who Stole Feminism.

You may not know, but second wave feminism was founded on numerous falsehoods, the findings of non-existent surveys, inflated statistics and faulty deductions (see especially Who Stole Feminism).

Currently at work I am having to cope with tearful, extremely irritable women suffering, in one case, from chronic infections - all signs of exhaustion. one is torn between exhaustion symptoms and inability to meet the families living costs. And female dentists, having completed the most expensive university degree course, are retiring in their late 30s.

How well feminists be working out this mess and the misanthropy I have encountered in some organisations?

yours faithfully

John S. Smyth.

ps/ In the early 1970s I was studying at Victoria University, Wellington, New Zealand. Having had several years in the workforce I submitted a letter to Sabina, the student newspaper warning that the workplace could be very demanding. The letter wasn't published. Men such as me who were seen to be thwarting women's liberation were, in fact, called male behaviourist Pigs.

And female conducted research now won't be worth a tin of fish.

Ms Pam Howard
Sex Discrimination
Commissioner
GPO Box 5218
Sydney, NSW 2001.

9/6

20 Aug. 2005

Dear Ms Howard

I received your letter dated 16 August 2005. Please feel free to use any of my letters for your project.

One of the women at Thorawal, a dental assistant, has two children and her partner is indisposed because of a work injury. She is irritable, exhausted and is smoking heavily. She is part-Aboriginal. She is at risk of oral and lung cancer and is suffering from chronic bronchitis. She is in a no-win situation. A reduction in working hours would result in insufficient income to support the family but continuing to work full-time (on an hourly rate of $15.95) will soon wreck her health. Yesterday I discussed the problem with the CEO but he has no solution.

The other, a Caucasian GP, is also exhibiting signs of exhaustion. He is studying for post-graduate examinations, working full-time and has two children. I have advised her to reduce her days

So four per week: Provide the CEO can agree she is in a more fortunate position as per Mustangs or a good income. Today, a post grad. ^{12/25/2018} Qualifier

I believe there is little likelihood of getting men to spend more time in the house. For one thing the families' income would be reduced and for another men are averse to bathing and feeding infants and housework in general. The fact is that women are anatomically, physiologically and psychologically equipped for pregnancy and feeding and nurturing infants. Most have a desire to do so: more than one liberated woman has told me how she wished she could stay at home. And, as you probably know the foetal risks of smoking during pregnancy are well documented.

However, there are other issues to be addressed for example misogyny, the decisions of the family court and the child sex-abuse smear campaign against men (which I have seen informed has occurred here as in New Zealand). Four years ago I was sacked from an Australian Government Department by a male CEO on the recommendation of a hostile feminist convert who, after holding a kangaroo court, decided I was unfit for my job. Every few days a male arrives at the guest-house at which I am staying carrying only a bag or a suitcase of clothes. The woman has been warded the car, the house and the children. After they have been drinking, and sometimes whilst sober, the anger is released: usually over a period of several days. They have deep feelings of injustice. One said "You don't stand a chance in the Family Court unless you're wearing a skirt."

About six months ago I approached staff of the NSW State Library for a copy of the survey on which a TV domestic violence programme was based. I'm still waiting.

I would suggest that in the first instance you have published in the press nationwide an honest synopsis of She's Notorious Who Spoke Feminism. Unless the misinformation and disinformation on which second wave feminism was largely based is publicised there is little likelihood of the current difficulties being rectified. Good luck with the Project. And may I suggest that Germaine Greer, Marilyn Waring, Glenda Steiner and a few other activists of the 1960s and 70s be invited to participate. They have a moral obligation to contribute to the solutions and to meet the cost of the publicity.

Yours truly

J. S.

John S. Smyth.

Ms Pam Goward
Sex Discrimination
Commissioner
GPO Box 5218
Sydney, NSW 2001

26

25 Aug 2001

Dear Ms Goward

Points which need to be publicised
are:

The unproven attribution of low teenage female self esteem and female anorexia to men.

Defective rape surveys.

Exaggerated domestic violence and child sexual abuse statistics.

Unfounded and false allegations of footballer rapes

False press articles on tranquillizer use by 1950s housewives and

The false attribution of femininity solely to socialisation.